Full report

Information about this school

- The school is above average in size for a primary school. It has two classes for each age group. Children in the Reception classes attend full time.
- The very large majority of pupils are White British. Very few pupils speak English as an additional language.
- The proportion of disadvantaged pupils supported by the pupil premium is well-below average. The pupil premium is extra government funding to support the education of pupils who are known to be eligible for free school meals, or those who are looked after by the local authority.
- The proportion of disabled pupils and those who have special educational needs is below average.
- The school runs a breakfast club for its own pupils. This was included in the inspection.

What does the school need to do to improve further?

- Ensure that colleagues share the excellent practice in marking pupils' work, seen in some classes and subjects, in particular by ensuring that:
 - teachers are more consistent and precise in the advice they give pupils about how to improve their work
 - teachers check that pupils always act on the advice they have been given.

Inspection judgements

The leadership and management are outstanding

- The headteacher, deputy headteacher and other leaders, including governors, have established a culture in the school that focuses firmly on improving pupils' achievement and personal development. Staff thoroughly check the quality of all aspects of education, particularly teaching, and the impact on pupils. Most parents praise the school and strongly support its work. Everyone works together extremely well to address any issues identified, so that high achievement and excellent behaviour are the norm.
- Other staff with responsibilities play a full part in maintaining high-quality teaching and learning. Subject leaders check regularly on the teaching and achievement in their areas, and lead colleagues in making improvements. Leaders of each age-range help coordinate practice so that staff work together effectively to ensure high standards of teaching and progress. The leaders of early years and of special educational needs ensure high quality education in their areas of responsibility.
- Leaders manage the quality of teaching very well, and teaching is outstanding as a result. Direct observations of lessons and analysis of work in pupils' books, compared with the attainment of each individual, enable leaders to give teachers clear feedback on their performance. They follow this up with extra training or advice, as appropriate, to help teaching improve.
- Formal procedures to manage teachers' performance are extremely effective. Teachers have clear targets that relate to their own professional needs, the progress of pupils and the school's current priorities. Senior leaders rigorously monitor each teacher's progress against targets, and link success appropriately to progression in pay. Extra help and support, when needed, quickly eliminate any weaknesses in individuals' performance.
- Underpinning many of the school's strengths are the excellent systems in place to assess each individual's attainment, and the use of the information obtained to tailor teaching to maximise all pupils' progress. This is particularly valuable in ensuring that the most able are challenged, and that disabled pupils and those who have special educational needs receive appropriate work. This contributes to the school's strong commitment to equal opportunities, ensuring that pupils of all abilities and backgrounds make the same excellent progress.
- Leaders spend pupil premium money very wisely. It helps provide extra staff to work with eligible pupils, or extra equipment for them. This has been extremely effective. Disadvantaged pupils attain similarly high standards to their classmates, and make progress that is at least as good. Other funding supplements the pupil premium to ensure that disadvantaged pupils have full access to all aspects of school life.
- The school makes excellent use of the primary school sport and physical education premium. The emphasis is on long-term effectiveness, improving the skills of staff through extra training. Extra equipment purchased and the use of specialist coaches have extended the range of sporting clubs and activities available. Membership of a local organisation has enabled extensive participation in competitive sport. There are plans to upgrade the quality of the playing surface of the school field, a long-standing problem.
- The local authority provides a useful and regular external evaluation of the school's effectiveness, supporting the school's own high-quality self-evaluation. It has rightly identified the school as being high-performing, and directs most of its support through the local cluster of schools, in which Finstall takes a strong role.
- The school's excellent curriculum provides a firm basis for pupils' outstanding achievement and personal development. There is a strong and successful focus on high standards in reading, writing and mathematics. A wide range of exciting and enjoyable activities in other subjects, special events and visits complements the work on English and mathematics. The wide range of sport and exercise available includes dance, swimming, football, golf and bell boating (an activity involving twin-hulled canoes that hold up to 10 children).

- The excellent provision for spiritual, moral, social and cultural development contributes strongly to pupils' outstanding behaviour. They learn about different religions and cultures, and to value other people's opinions and beliefs. The school enhances this by links with schools in this country with very different intakes, as well as by the flourishing partnership with schools in France. The school is highly successful in its active promotion of British values. The impact is clear in pupils' secure understanding of democracy and the rule of law, supported by their participation in representative bodies in the school, and their close adherence to and support for the school's rules and routines. Discrimination is not tolerated. The school prepares pupils extremely well for life in modern British society.
- Safeguarding procedures meet requirements and are very robust. The school gives a high priority to this aspect of its provision, and liaises well with other agencies and with parents to help keep pupils secure. It is quick to respond to any issues, and ensures a high level of training for staff and governors to support this.
- The governance of the school:
 - Governance is extremely effective. Governors have excellent systems to check on the school's effectiveness, and are fully involved in the process of monitoring how well it is doing. In particular, their very secure understanding of data means they are fully aware of how well pupils are achieving. This means they can challenge staff and hold the school to account for its work, as well as supporting it in its aims. They have a good knowledge of the quality of teaching, through the school's excellent systems that check and improve teachers' performance. They use this information to reward good performance and to tackle any issues robustly.

The behaviour and safety of pupils are outstanding

Behaviour

- The behaviour of pupils is outstanding. Right from their start in Reception, pupils are relaxed and happy in school, follow routines very conscientiously, and get along extremely well with each other and with the staff.
- Pupils concentrate very hard in class and are keen to succeed. They listen attentively to their teachers, respond thoughtfully to questions and follow instructions very well. They appreciate the system of rewards and sanctions, and older pupils say these have resulted in much better behaviour.
- Pupils' deep interest in what they are learning strongly supports their progress. They stay on task, whether they are working in a group or independently, and get on conscientiously with their work. They have excellent collaborative skills and share ideas thoughtfully, listening carefully to each other and making decisions together.
- Pupils show great consideration for each other, whether at work or at play. At break times, play is often lively and energetic, but pupils are always careful not to interfere with others' games. In class, they willingly help others who need it, and take a lively interest in each other's work, praising each other for success.
- Pupils' very positive attitudes and excellent relationships are illustrated by their cheerful approach to breakfast club, when pupils of different ages play together sensibly, while enjoying a healthy start to the day.
- In discussion, older pupils are very reflective on their own behaviour, and know how it is important for their future lives in school and beyond. Several pupils explained to an inspector how they had worked to improve their own behaviour because they know it will boost their chances of success in school.

Safety

- The school's work to keep pupils safe and secure is outstanding. Pupils take care to behave safely in school and know they have to contribute to their classmates' safety as well as their own. They have learned how to stay safe, on the internet, for example. Hygiene is continually reinforced at appropriate times during the school day.

- Pupils have a good understanding of what bullying is in its different forms, and of how it differs from other poor behaviour. They can remember minor incidents from the past, but not any from recently, and say that bullying is very rare. They are very confident that their teachers would quickly deal with any problems.
- Pupils say that they feel very safe in the school, and can explain what they and the staff do to maintain this. Most parents are positive about how the school looks after their children.
- Attendance is consistently above average, and pupils are punctual to school and to lessons.

The quality of teaching is outstanding

- Teachers show exceptional skill in generating enthusiasm and maintaining pupils' interest in lessons. Pupils themselves said this is one of the things they like most about the school, and that they are never bored.
- Teachers establish very clear routines in class and emphasise their high expectations of work and behaviour. Pupils respond to this very positively. They like and respect their teachers and are keen to please them by meeting their expectations.
- Teachers explain things extremely well to pupils, often using the interactive whiteboard to clarify their explanations and, when appropriate, show them just what is wanted. This means that pupils are able to get straight on with their work, because they understand what is wanted, and no time is wasted.
- Teachers make excellent use of the information about pupils' achievement to give them tasks that are challenging but manageable. They give the most-able pupils harder work, and give easier tasks to support those who might otherwise struggle. Teachers build upon this practice by frequently checking on pupils' progress during lessons, quickly intervening to help any who are struggling, and thoughtfully challenging others to refine their work and extend their thinking.
- The teaching of mathematics is strong because teachers insist that pupils think through their ideas and explain their thinking. This gives pupils a deeper insight and a more secure understanding, so that they are able to build on what they already know.
- The teaching of reading gets off to an excellent start in the early years, when teachers give pupils a secure understanding of phonics (how different letter combinations in words represent different sounds). Across the school, teaching develops pupils' skills systematically and helps pupils use their reading skills in a variety of other subjects to boost their learning.
- The teaching of writing has improved in the last year. Teachers dealt successfully with the relative weakness in boys' writing by choosing topics that appealed more to them. In parallel, teachers helped pupils to improve their presentation through the consistent use of a joined handwriting style. This is also having a positive impact on the fluency of pupils' writing and on spelling. Teachers give pupils excellent opportunities to use their writing skills in other subjects, which provides very good practice in using a range of styles.
- Skilled teaching assistants make a strong contribution to pupils' progress in lessons. They are well briefed to complement the work of the teacher so that the adults work as an effective team. Teachers use these extra adults particularly well to ensure that pupils with special educational needs receive a balance of support and challenge to help them succeed. Teaching assistants make a particularly strong contribution to the outstanding teaching and learning in the early years.
- All teachers mark pupils' work regularly and accurately. They praise what pupils have done well, which motivates them to work hard. In some books, pupils improve their work considerably in response to excellent practice in marking, when teachers make it very clear how pupils can do better. This practice is not consistent, and in some cases, teachers do not always ensure that pupils act on their advice. Senior leaders are considering how to share the excellent practice with all colleagues.

The achievement of pupils is outstanding

- Boys and girls from different backgrounds all make excellent progress across the school. As a result, overall attainment is very high.
- Children start in early years with skills and understanding that vary considerably between individuals but are broadly typical for their ages. By the end of Reception, they have made outstanding progress, with an above-average proportion reaching a good level of development. In 2014, boys achieved less well in writing but there is no sign of this relative weakness now.
- Excellent progress continues at Key Stages 1 and 2. Standards at the end of Year 2 have been significantly above average in reading, writing and mathematics for several years. By Year 4, the school's records and the work in pupils' books show they are working at a much higher level than is usual for their age. Last year, over half of the Year 4 pupils reached the level expected for pupils in Year 6. Work in books shows that standards this year are similarly high.
- The most-able pupils all achieve extremely well, with all those in the current and previous Year 4 classes making at least the progress expected of them, and many exceeding this. Many pupils in the current Year 4 are producing work that would be typical of pupils at the end of Key Stage 2. For example, in mathematics, Year 4 pupils show a deep level of understanding of equivalent fractions and percentages.
- Disabled pupils and those who have special educational needs make the same excellent progress as their classmates, and reach higher levels of attainment than would be expected from their individual starting points.
- There are too few disadvantaged pupils to compare their attainment with others in the school or nationally without potentially identifying them. Their progress through the school is at least as good as that of their classmates, and is sometimes better.
- Pupils have excellent computer skills and use these extremely well to support their learning in other subjects.

The early years provision is outstanding

- Provision in the early years classes shares many of the strengths of the rest of the school. Children make excellent progress from their starting points in all areas of learning and are extremely well prepared to start in Year 1.
- Children do particularly well in phonics because teaching of this aspect of reading is highly effective. Adults teach children in groups that reflect the stage they have reached, so that they learn quickly. The range of exciting activities hold their attention and lead to rapid progress. They use their understanding very well to help them read, and it is exceptionally effective in helping them to write. Consequently, boys' writing, weaker in 2014, matches that of the girls. All the children are already becoming independent writers, with the most able writing legible, well-spelled sentences unaided.
- Teaching is outstanding. Adults are particularly skilled at knowing when to intervene in children's play to extend their learning. Staff challenge children to think about what they are doing and to explain their ideas. This develops their understanding extremely well, extends their vocabulary, and contributes to very good speaking and listening skills.
- The provision of a wide range of interesting, hands-on, practical activities indoors and out engages children's enthusiasm and ensures that they are purposefully involved in learning throughout the day. They are strongly encouraged to cooperate in their play and do so very well, sharing equipment happily and discussing their ideas enthusiastically.
- The leadership of the early years is outstanding. Staff work together very effectively. They use regular and frequent assessments of children's skills and interests to ensure that they have activities that challenge and engage them. The quick response in 2014, when boys' writing showed it was lagging behind other aspects of their learning, is testament to the high-quality leadership in the early years.

- As in the rest of the school, procedures to keep children safe are strong, and children are looked after very well. They feel extremely happy, safe and secure and greatly enjoy learning. They behave extremely well, following routines conscientiously and responding quickly and sensibly to adults' questions or instructions.

What inspection judgements mean
